

Issued 9/25/17

There's a New Email Scam Hitting Netflix Users

Between the massive Equifax data breach and a round of suspicious emails from Amazon, it seems that hacks and scams are becoming more and more frequent these days.

The latest scam is coming to Netflix customers via email and targeting their bank information.

According to a writer at the Guardian who received the scam himself, an email from the address `supportnetflix@checkinformation.com` appeared in his inbox saying that his Netflix account was placed on hold because of a problem with his payment information. The email contained a link to a fake Netflix page that then prompted him to input his payment information, under the premise of correcting it.

According to many on social media, including the Guardian writer, the email appeared very similar to official Netflix communication, and could easily trick users who are unaware of the scam.