HACKERS PHISHING FACEBOOK ADDICTS THIS HOLIDAY SEASON

According to SC Magazine, hackers are taking advantage of the fact that most people remember their Facebook login tied to the fact that during the holidays nobody wants to lose access to their primary social media outlet as a way to convince their victims to sign on to a malicious landing page that will be used to steal their personal information. Malwarebytes researchers are reporting that cybercriminals are using these fake landing pages as bait in phishing scams that say the person has lost access to Facebook, but this can be regained using the common “Login with Facebook,” method used by many valid websites. “It is imperative that users activate multi-factor authentication so that even if users get their passwords stolen through phishing it would still add another security layer that a criminal would have to bypass. It is also important not to use the same password for all your accounts in case a criminal steals your password.”
